"This abstract," continued Mr. Roderick, "they are required by law to forward to the Board of Supervisors at the first annual meeting in August. The amount is then levied in the general taxes in the Fall and collected by the town tax collector. He pays the amount of claim—say $1,500—to John Y. McKane. Supervisor of the town, who in turn pays it over to the claimant and takes a receipt. So he then simply files an abstract account and exhibits his vouchers.

"That is all Mr. McKane has to do with a claim. All the itemized bills, including my own for counsel fees, are on file with the Town Clerk at Gravesend."

Mr. Roderick then went on to tell how the Town Auditor cut his bills. He cited a case where he had saved the town $24,000 and $8,000 a year as a tax levied by the county. He worked, he said two years on the case. His disbursements were $700, and he presented a bill of $2,000. This bill, he said, was cut to $1,500, leaving him $800 profit.

Mr. Roderick said Jesse Johnson and William J. Gaynor continually had ciaims against the town for counsel fees, but Mr. Bennett did not mention these claims.

Two of the indictments accuse Vall of forgery in the third degree; the third is for perjury, and covers the same charges, though in different language, as were made in the indictment on which Vall was arrested a week ago.

There are two counts in each of the new indictments. One indictment alleges that on Aug. 15, 1890, Vail falsified the account of Paul C. Grening, the realiestate operator, so as to make it appear that on April 18, 1887, Grening had on deposit with the bank the sum of $35, 07; on April 19, $3,475.45, and again on the same date $27,500.

Vail, it is charged, knew that Grening was not entitled to these sums and knew that the credits and accounts were false. The other indictment for forgery accuses Vail of having on Aug. 15, 1890, Vail accomplished this falsification of the Company had a credit of $82,700. The second count alleges that on Aug. 18, 1890, Vail accomplished this falsification of the Company's accounts by changing an entry in the ledger from $700 to $82,700.

It is alleged that Vail knew these flexures were false, and made them for pacific will be taken from the Southern Pacific and that the guaranteed dividend of $82,700. Mr. Phillips, counsel for Conklin, said against John McCarty, in the Sixth Senatorial District.
John Hayes, Republican watcher of the Fifth District of Castleton, testified this morning that while he was counting the Republican ballots after the polis closed the Democratic ballots disappeared and he never saw them again. He said he thought they were burned in the stove in the polling-place.
William D. Gallard testified that he examined the stubs and returned ballots in many of the districts of Richmond.

It is alleged that Vail knew these the purpose of defrauding the bank.
